

Marjorie Chinadle graduated from the University of Wyoming in 1974 with a degree in Home Economics Extension and Education. She worked as an Extension Agent in Wyoming for three years before moving to Montana to become a full time homemaker and farm hand. She along with her husband, Pat, have raised 3 wonderful children and thousands of bushels of wheat.

Marjorie began her teaching career in 1999 as a part-time Family and Consumer Science teacher. Since then she has moved her program from a “drop in to eat program” to a full time curriculum that is aligned with state and national standards. She established an FCCLA chapter that has grown from 5 members the first year to 21 this year. She is very active in her school and community with everything from serving on the school technology committee to being a volunteer First Responder on the Ambulance.

Marjorie has been with the Family Economics and Financial Education project since its inception. She teaches their curriculum in a full semester course as well as using the curriculum to supplement her other classes. Marjorie has been a Master Teacher with the project for the last two years as a trainer and workshop facilitator.

Marjorie was named the 2004 Association of Career and Technical Educators New Career and Technical Teacher of the year for Montana. She currently serves as Vice President of this organization.
